

True stories. Real people.

Each helped by local agencies and local heroes.

A man came to the Caring Kitchen seeking a temporary place to stay. He was certain that he could be self sufficient if he just had help and time to get his life in order. As he was staying in the shelter, he put an ad in the local paper stating that he needed a job. A local businessman answered his ad and hired him. Due to the services of the Caring Kitchen and his commitment to bettering his life, he now has permanent housing, a vehicle, employment and is doing great!

Jill is a single mother of three. With the help of Interfaith Hospitality Network, she has overcome a life of domestic violence and homelessness. Working closely with a case manager, they were able to breakdown the barriers that were keeping her from being successful and self sufficient. She is now employed and has found affordable housing through local assistance. Jill has overcome many obstacles and continues to strive and make positive choices in her life. This could not have been accomplished without the commitment and dedication of Interfaith Hospitality Network.

Steve was having trouble with his lungs and legs, making it difficult to do his job. He visited Madison County's Free Clinic and was diagnosed with diabetes, coronary artery disease and a lung infection. After a stay in the hospital Steve unfortunately lost his job. However, he was able to receive his prescription medications and other vital medical services with vouchers provided at the Free Clinic. When asked about the Free Clinic Steve said, " I enjoyed the doctors...they helped me find out what was wrong with my legs and my lungs. They do a great job!"
